Deep Encounter with the Unconscious Love madness in Clinical Practice

By
Professor Ronald Teague
14-18 Jan 2018
Salesian Retreat House, Cheung Chau

I. Rationale

Each day the psychotherapist/clinician encounters patients' attempts to make sense of their confusing world by projecting different contents of the Unconscious onto individuals and situations that are both confusing and difficult. Understanding how the Unconscious mind works helps the psychotherapist/clinicians gain insight on how patients will respond in various situations and crisis; and practically generate successful interventions, guide patients through the struggle that they themselves alone may not be able to overcome.

C.G. Jung discovered that whenever the human mind cannot understand something rationally humans attempt to make sense of things by projecting the contents of the Collective Unconscious onto the unknown phenomenon.

II. Content

Frequently we encounter patients who have an experience that might be called "love madness". This is when they develop an intense attachment to someone and they will do almost anything to get close to this person. This might involve a serious crush, stalking behaviour, obsessive ideation or volatile relationships. Object Relations and Attachment Theories have explored this problem in great detail and we should all be grateful for this. These psychodynamic theorists have also developed superb intervention techniques that have proved to be quite effective. Never the less, the reason that erotic pathology should exist in the first place is, for the most part, still unexplored.

This workshop will examine the Archetypal roots of extreme erotic attachments and offer suggestions about what the psychic purpose of these are. It will do so by using a Transcultural Analytic hermeneutic to see what the essential human experience of 'love madness' is. Various folk magical traditions, folk legends and mythologies, which focus on 'love madness' will be explored. Additionally the two works*, the Hypnerotomachia of Poliphili and the Cour d'Amour Epris or King Reneé's Book of Love, will be used to try to understand the Archetypal sources of this clinical pathology.

Clinicians who attend this retreat should, at its end, be able to understand the psychic function of 'love madness' as well as how to address this problem in clinical cases.
